

Completing your forms

All the forms you need to calculate your federal tax are included in this package. Complete the schedules that apply to you and attach a copy to your return.

If you had income from a business (including income you received as a limited or non-active partner), and the business has a permanent establishment in a province outside Quebec, complete Form T2203, Provincial and Territorial Taxes for Multiple Jurisdictions.

The Government of Quebec develops and administers its own tax laws and policies. If you live in the province of Quebec, you may need to file a separate provincial income tax return.

For more information about your tax liability, visit revenuquebec.ca/en.

Family allowance

Family allowance is financial assistance paid to all eligible Quebec families with one or more dependent children under 18 years of age.

The payment is calculated based on your family income from the previous year, your conjugal status (with or without a spouse), the number of dependent children under the age of 18 living with you, and the number of children in shared custody.

You must file your application for family allowance with Retraite Québec. You must also inform them of any change in your family situation.

You do not need to file an application for a new birth in Quebec, the Directeur de l'état civil will automatically notify Retraite Québec.

You can apply on Retraite Québec's website at retraitequebec.gouv.qc.ca/en or contact Retraite Québec to get the Application for Family Allowance Payments form.
